

Few interior designers ever achieve celebrity status. But for Los Angeles-based partners Schuyler Samperton and Anna Hackathorn, the ascent to the top has been fast and furious. In just two short years, the mediagenic pair has decorated one Hollywood home after another, culminating in a list of clients so high profile that confidentiality agreements prevent them from naming names. "We've got a lot of great projects in the works, but I can't make a peep!" Samperton laughs.

With résumés that read like maps to the stars, it's not surprising that these savvy stylists fit in so well with the Hollywood crowd. Before joining forces, Samperton was a publicist for Fox Television and Hackathorn managed the design of such flagship retail stores as Donna Karan. After meeting five years ago while working for the same design firm, the two have developed an aesthetic all their own. "We don't have one particular style," Hackathorn says. "We take our cue from the architecture of the space and try not to make it look too decorated." From the contemporary lobby and screening room of Brian Grazer and Ron Howard's Imagine Entertainment to the traditional Hancock Park home of a Hollywood producer, the duo is just getting started. —Chloé Harris
